

the theology behind your apportionment

GIVING

In The United Methodist Church, there always has been a central focus on working together, seeing resources as a way to connect all in ministry. The United Methodist Church was formed from a desire to witness to a broken world by using resources and helping the local church connect and see the powerful impact churches across the United Methodist Connection can have in God's kingdom.

What developed is the term known as apportionments, translated as a portion of one's resources going to the Annual Conference to share with both the General Conference and ministries within the Annual Conference. Because the church is different in various parts of the Connection, the formulas and means of reaching those goals are developed within each Annual Conference.

the
theology
behind your apportionment

GIVING

In The United Methodist Church, there always has been a central focus on working together, seeing resources as a way to connect all in ministry. The United Methodist Church was formed from a desire to witness to a broken world by using resources and helping the local church connect and see the powerful impact churches across the United Methodist Connection can have in God's kingdom.

What developed is the term known as apportionments, translated as a portion of one's resources going to the Annual Conference to share with both the General Conference and ministries within the Annual Conference. Because the church is different in various parts of the Connection, the formulas and means of reaching those goals are developed within each Annual Conference.

The significance of sharing resources is how people both locally and internationally are brought together by the connection.

Because of your generosity, someone in Africa has an opportunity to attend school and return to their village and start a school program.

Because of your generosity in our Annual Conference, we have a dedicated staff member in the conference office who, when disaster strikes in the United States, immediately has contacts and ways to coordinate relief efforts with UMCOR, so both small and large churches can do great things together.

1 Corinthians speaks to this power in Chapter 12, when we are reminded of the many parts that make one body. God needs the small church, the medium church, and the large church all working together to share in the mission God has given us to seek life abundantly, and to seek it together.

Learn more about how our apportionment giving connects us at umcsc.org/giving.

The significance of sharing resources is how people both locally and internationally are brought together by the connection.

Because of your generosity, someone in Africa has an opportunity to attend school and return to their village and start a school program.

Because of your generosity in our Annual Conference, we have a dedicated staff member in the conference office who, when disaster strikes in the United States, immediately has contacts and ways to coordinate relief efforts with UMCOR, so both small and large churches can do great things together.

1 Corinthians speaks to this power in Chapter 12, when we are reminded of the many parts that make one body. God needs the small church, the medium church, and the large church all working together to share in the mission God has given us to seek life abundantly, and to seek it together.

Learn more about how our apportionment giving connects us at umcsc.org/giving.